

PID 6 NEWS

Vol. 2., Issue III

Publication for the Residents of Public Improvement District Area 6 (PID6)

- April/May 2006
- Basswood Park
- Park Bend
- Park Glen
- Park Place
- Parkway Hill
- Parkway Hill Addition
- Parkway at Park Glen
- Parkwood Estates
- Summerbrook
- Villages of Parkwood Hill

PID 6 Board Meetings – 7pm

The last Wednesday of every month
Fossil Creek Place I - Suite 280
3201 N E Loop 820
Fort Worth, Texas 76137

Easter Eggstravaganza

By Ryan Thomas

I was lucky enough to spot the Easter Bunny preparing for the day's festivities in the early hours of the morning, but he hopped away before I had a chance to talk to him.

Soon after, people poured into the park to celebrate Easter with their hopes for finding goodies high. They would not be disappointed. Before any egg hunts even began, vendors handed out generous amounts of eggs to passing children. Music was supplied by All Occasion D.J. Karaoke, who made sure to be ready even before the early birds arrived.

Before long the event got completely under way. The infamous "Bunny Hop" kicked it off with a bang, and The Easter Bunny made a rare appearance to help out with the Bunny Hop before going back to working hard. Red and blue balloons bobbed up and down along with The Easter Bunny and all his eager followers.

Even after the Bunny Hop line dispersed, some enthusiastic children didn't let go of the Easter spirit, and continued hopping along enjoying themselves.

Not long after, the limbo commenced, and it was soon down to two lone competitors. There was an epic limbo battle, and one talented limboer made it out on top... or bottom if you want to look at it that way.

Just before the first egg scramble was about to begin, kids squeezed tighter and tighter around the meadow that The Easter Bunny worked so hard to get ready. Before long, the hunt began in earnest. Children ran around claiming their hard-earned prizes before they were all gone.

I took advantage of the break between egg hunts to check out the food because what would Easter be without a bite to eat? Although the funnel cakes and candy apples looked good, I went with a hot dog, which seemed to be a popular choice.

To celebrate Easter in a little more modern way, people took advantage of the inflated bouncing castles, hopping almost high enough to rival The Easter Bunny himself.

Speaking of The Easter Bunny, I checked up on him while he was greeting his adoring fans. Despite having worked hard since early in the morning, he was still full of energy, and more than happy to sit with anyone who wanted to take a picture.

I had trouble deciding where to go first when I went to check out the vendors. There were so many unique places, from An Angels Touch massage parlor, to La Paleta, a booth specializing in Mexican drinks and fruit. I looked into the First Bank of Texas and Ace

Hardware (who was handing out yardsticks) to the tune of Footloose.

Just before the fourth egg hunt I stopped by the cake walk, just in time to see the latest victor grab his cake with more than a little enthusiasm. Just when I thought the excitement had reached its peak, a sword-wielding Easter reveler dashed past me. Apparently, he had just visited the balloon booth. I decided to follow his example, and had a dog I named Teacup made for me.

After enjoying themselves all day, the Easter celebrators began returning home, the vendors packed up their goods, and The Easter Bunny began his planning for next year's fun and games.

MORE PICTURES INSIDE

